Important Information About This Request

Please note, the excess contribution, plus earnings on such excess contribution (if any), will be removed from the cash account portion of your HSA. If the balance in the cash account portion of your HSA is insufficient to cover the amount requested, and you have an HSA investment account, you must liquidate investments in your investment account and transfer the proceeds to your cash account before the excess contribution can be returned to you. If your HSA does not contain sufficient funds to return the full amount of the requested excess contribution and earnings on the excess contribution to you, then you authorize Chase to return the then-current balance in your HSA. Chase will send IRS Form 1099-SA for the full amount of the excess contribution returned plus earnings.
